Covent Garden © London on View

Garrick Street is a stone's throw from Covent Garden, close to the Royal Opera House and a short stroll from many of London's theatres. For those who love to be near city night life - theatres, restaurants, the hustle and the bustle of life at the end of the working day - then this part of London will be perfect for you. Put on some comfortable shoes and explore, check out the side streets, many of which are traffic free, find the short cuts, and discover for yourself where the buzz and the razzmatazz are to be found. Invest a little time in really learning your way around, and everyday life will be great.

There are plenty of restaurants on your doorstep, shops and art galleries not far away, and the two closest underground stations are each just a few minutes' walk - it's all there and you are in the centre of it!

For theatre lovers there is no better location. You will be able to see some of the most celebrated plays and musicals. Leicester Square is home to the large West End cinemas and most of the big blockbuster films have their UK premiers here.

Garrick Street was named in honour of David Garrick, who was born in Hereford in 1717 and grew up to become one of England's most celebrated and admired actors and an innovative theatre manager. As a very young man he was for a time a pupil of Dr Samuel Johnson, writer of the first-ever dictionary, 'A Dictionary of the English Language'. The Garrick Theatre nearby in Charing Cross Road was also named for him. It was opened in 1889.

The Garrick Club is to be found at Number 15 Garrick Street. A private gentlemen's club founded in 1831, the Garrick is an exclusive establishment and over the years many famous writers, actors and painters have been members, men such as Charles Dickens, H. G. Wells, Sir Laurence Olivier and John Everett Millais

Out & About

© Visit London Images/Big foto/london-pictures.com

Garrick Street is in a good central location and so much of interest lies within easy reach. The underground system is simple to understand and wherever you go in London you will never be far from something interesting to explore. You can see a lot of London from the top of a double decker bus - so don't miss out. Climb on to the top and head for the front seats!

Covent Garden is pure entertainment! It's filled with street entertainers, open air cafes from which to watch the world go by, some elegant architecture, plenty of interest. Here also is the Royal Opera House, home to The Royal Opera and The Royal Ballet.

The National Gallery and National Portrait Gallery are within a short walk; both are free and offer hours of interest. The Courtauld Gallery is small but perfect, a gem. It is to be found in Somerset House, an important arts and cultural centre on the Strand. In winter the courtyard is turned into an ice skating rink!

Out & About

St James's Park © ondon-pictures.com

Covent Garden © London on View

A stroll through Trafalgar Square and down The Mall will take you to Buckingham Palace and perhaps the Changing of the Guard ceremony, colourful pageantry which the Brits do so well! The Queen's Gallery and The Royal Mews, both at Buckingham Palace, are open to the public. Horse Guards' Parade is in Whitehall, and further along is Downing Street, the official home of the Prime Minister.

For those of you who love to jog, St James's Park offers the perfect opportunity. The oldest of London's eight Royal Parks, nearly 60 acres of good paths, grass and trees await you.

There is something for everyone in London. According to Dr Samuel Johnson, 'When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life, for there is in London all that life can afford'.

Shopping

Oxford Street © London on View

The shops in and around Covent Garden Market offer a slightly different shopping experience from the more predictable high street shops. Handmade bags, tee shirts, ceramics, jewellery, teddy bears, vintage militaria - a really eclectic mix. The market itself hosts different stalls on different days - antiques on Monday, on Tuesday to Friday stalls offer household goods, clothes, food and gifts, and on Saturdays and Sundays it's the turn of arts and crafts. Never a dull moment.

For clothes and fashion shops not too far away, Long Acre, King Street, James Street and Floral Street have a wide selection. There you will find many of the well known designer brands plus a few that you probably won't have heard of. For tailor-made suits, shirts, hats and shoes, Jermyn Street is the place to go, but it can be expensive! Put on some comfortable shoes and explore!

If you are in search of a more mainstream and bustling retail experience, Oxford Street and Tottenham Court Road are both popular shopping destinations and provide fashion, technology and furniture to the masses. For department stores, John Lewis, House of Fraser and Selfridge's in Oxford Street should fit the bill. Don't miss a visit to Liberty's at the top of Regent Street, where Regent Street meets Oxford Street. The building alone is a treat, both outside and in, and the creative and imaginative managers of the store never fail to root out and have on display unusual and unique items. Further down Regent Street towards Piccadilly is Hamley's toy shop, a great place for toy lovers of all ages to while away some time.

World-famous Fortnum & Mason is at 181 Piccadilly. 'Purveyors of the finest foods and teas', the shop has supplied the Royal Family for many decades. It is extremely elegant and an enjoyable place, if somewhat expensive, for a cup of very English tea.

A little further afield, beyond Hyde Park Corner, lie Knightsbridge and Cromwell Road. Here the world-famous department store Harrod's is king, but make no mistake, there are many many other shops well worth a look. So try a slow stroll along Knightsbridge, not missing a diversion into Beauchamp Place, and see what you can find.
